Rory McIlroy is predicting a change in the European Tour's rules of golf on his return to the PGA Tour. McIlroy, who won his third Major championship of the year by capturing the Masters title in April, will return to action in the US this week. And while it's not a major, McIlroy is now threatening to launch a push for change in the scheduling of the FedEx St Jude Classic next February. McIlroy, who defeated Jon Rahm in three playoff holes at Augusta, is very frustrated with the current schedule as he enters an event in the US that is the longest in terms of travel. "Looking at the FedEx St Jude Classic, it's going to be a six-hour flight to Memphis in December, and then a seven-hour flight back," McIlroy said. "That doesn't make any sense to me. Guys are playing at places like the Canadian Open, the Memorial and the British Open in May. They're not going to make it down there in December. "The old golf schedule, it was really good. But if the PGA want to get the bigger events in January in different markets, that's fine by me. "I'll play them. I'm not going to hold up the US Open for the European Tour. That's not my job." You get to play the tournaments in the States. You get to hang with big stars. "It's just a great deal for players because we're not flying all the way to South Africa in February or Miami in June or wherever. There's not a lot of that. And as the player's getting older, the longer we stay on the road, the less fit we're going to be. "But if they're going to make the big events earlier, I'm fine with that. It's a great event. I like playing it. I
